ity, environment, and an overwhelming desire to meet peoples of all spiritual beliefs and races. These opening chapters tell of encounters in her developing viewpoint: beginning education, earliest trips and travels, citizenship, family service, marriage, the natural world, the invisible world, the world of the eternal self, and the enterprise of bestowing a legacy before demise.

Chapters 11-42 give accounts of journeys into many lands including geographical and historical facts combined with a sprinkling of myths, imaginative fancies and legends that have become associated with these individual cultures. Beyond the civilization of each people are the beliefs that inspired their spiritual and social unification. The overpowering wish to meet the peoples of the world eventually took Marjorie and her husband Kenneth to many countries throughout the seven continents.

This book highlights the praiseworthy spirit and triumphs of the everyday heroes of all classes, races and creeds who today still continue to enrich the one world of humanity. Beyond and above the descriptions of each people's accomplishments is an insight into the development of their arts and sciences.

More than historical facts and reference material, Encounter... is a journey of the head and of the heart. It enables each reader, by identifying with the human experiences in personal ways, to become the traveler. Relating each encounter, Marjorie shares the world with her readers.

trains with a USA trip from West Coast to East Coast and return by VW Camper pulling an Apache fold-up trailer.

In chapter 35, Odyssey '84: Canadian Border and Northern USA, Marjorie writes: "Time was pressing us on as we drove through Lusk, Cheyenne, Laramie, Rock Springs, Ogden, Pocatello, Twin Falls and Boise. Entering Oregon at Ontario we were rolling along at a fast but legal speed toward Baker when suddenly, our VW transmission went out. Unable to shift, and picking up more and more speed with a heavily loaded trailer adding to our accelerating, we were descending from a high elevation, on the curving mountain road with a frightening drop-off to a desolate area on the right side (that looked to be about a thousand feet) when we passed a sign indicating there were 3 exits to Baker. Hoping the middle exit would be the business district we turned off there. Not able to stop for any red lights that might 'seem to enter our path' we ..."
